project after the Legislature has appropriated the money and I think, if this is the case, I think the people in the state of Nebraska ought to know that he's the one that's slowing the projects and if he wants that credit, that's fine, but I don't see how we can, as in the Legislature, appropriate money to build these buildings and then come in here a year later and nothing has been done on the project and this is the part that I'm trying to understand. Now, do you know if there is more than one project he's done this to or is this only one.

PRESIDENT: Senator Marvel.

SENATOR MARVEL: I could name other projects in the past where there has been a jacking around of figures. That's what you are asking.'

SENATOR BARNETT: That's right.

SENATOR MARVEL: Yes sir, there has.

PRESIDENT: The chair recognizes Senator Clark. Oh, excuse me. Senator Barnett.

SENATOR BARNETT: I would like to find out, if I could. Then what we are saying in effect is that the Governor has said that this project will not go on and this was appropriated a year ago, the money. Is this normal procedure that projects wait a year from the time we appropriate the money until they are implemented. If so, why do we do it a year ahead? Do you follow my questioning, Senator Marvel?

SENATOR MARVEL: It is normal procedure that the projects take a considerable amount of time. Whether they take a year or not is questionable and I was referring when I talked in answer to your question, I was referring to a project at the--I'm trying to think of what it is called now--they changed the name so often. It used to be the Ag College, then it was the East Campus and now it's the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources. That's close enough to start with. Now it does take an extended amount of time so it's natural that a year would pass but it's also true that you can slow down the process if you want to. There have been projects that have been slowed down by the Governor's office, that have been slowed down by the University of Nebraska. Not entirely on the Governor, I'm saying this. Yes sir, it's true and may I also say this that we'll make a report to this Legislature regardless of whether you pass this motion or not.

SENATOR BARNETT: Just one more thing then. Mr. President, and that's it. I for one would want to support--not support Senator Carsten's motion because I think that if we have given the go ahead to this project, then I think that we should stick behind it and see that it's carried through because a lot of people asked for this program and a lot of people have wanted this construction to be given consideration in the area of Omaha and I think that we owe it to them. We owe it to these people to continue with the project as it was so stated in the beginning.

PRESIDENT: The chair recognizes Senator Clark.

SENATOR CLARK: Mr. President and members of the body, I want to be awfully careful that I don't step on someone's toes that has a capital construction project and you can tell who they are by the ones that are talking. I just don't happen to have any in my district. But the thing that I'm trying to say
